Dashcams are becoming increasingly popular in the United States, and for good reason. Not only do they provide a cheap way to protect yourself from insurance scams and give you valuable information in case of an accident or collision, but they can also be used as a tool to help other drivers on the road. Many people might not know what a dashcam is, how it functions, or where to set up their camera. We'll go through everything you need to know about using your own dashcam so that your footage will provide evidence if necessary! The important thing to remember when setting up your dashcam is that having it in the right place will help you gather as much footage as possible. To do this, follow these steps: -Make sure your camera has a clear view of what's happening in front of you, but also anything that might happen inside your car like when someone steals something from a glove box or if there is an altercation with one of your passengers. -Mount the camera to be able to rotate it 360 degrees so you can always have the best angle for whatever happens outside or inside your vehicle. -Place the dashcam at eye level which will help eliminate any distortion caused by dealing with extreme closeups on certain parts of footage while still providing detail about everything going on around you. Bonus Tip: If mounting the camera isn't possible then try using a suction cup mount to drill holes in their car. Here are some of the important settings to change according to your preference when you first install a dashcam in the car- - Film in 720p or 1080p resolution, and don't forget to change the frames per second. Be informed that the higher FPS you choose to shoot at, the more storage and power it will require from the system. - Use a wide-angle lens so you can see all around your car's exterior and interior from a couple of cameras, if not one (and not have to buy more). - Adjust white balance based on ambient light levels with an automatic setting like "auto." This will ensure that footage is always clear for any type of lighting situation. - Adjust exposure so that images in the frame are not too dark or bright. This is sometimes called "Exposure Compensation." - Adjust focus to suit your preference- some people prefer blurry background while others like a sharp, crisp image. But I recommend having sharp images so that you don't miss anything when needed from your dashcam. - Consider adjusting contrast and saturation levels if you want more colors in the video (or less). Won't recommend it for regular use. But for Vlogging, this is a thing that can instantly give the video a nice look. - Look for digital noise on the screen and adjust either sensitivities or ISO accordingly to reduce it as much as possible; this will ensure quality footage without any distracting visual artifacts! - Lastly, look at shutter speed: can you see motion blur? If so then try reducing it by selecting "night" mode with a higher FPS setting of 30 frames per second instead of 24 fps. Bonus Tip: Adjust settings like auto shut off, battery saver, specific time to keep data in the storage before deletion. Each person has different preferences for these things. So, I'll leave this up to you. But I recommend keeping footage as long as your storage space efficiently. But if you want to save certain videos from being deleted automatically, you need to change the settings. If you want to save a video for an extended time, make sure that it is selected in "long-term storage" and not in "short-term storage". This can be done by going into your dashcam's menu or simply changing the settings > Storage Management > Long Term Video Storage > Select Videos To Keep For Extended Time Period (>=30 days). However, not all dashcams come with this feature and your device may have a simple save button, which saves a specific portion of the video, typically starting from a minute before pressing the button until you turn it off. In case of emergency, some cameras will automatically save video for thirty seconds before an event occurs even if you didn't have it set to do so. Once the event has happened, your dashcam automatically records any incident that may occur up until three minutes after the initial collision or accident. The law requires drivers in certain states to maintain a recording device in their car while they are driving on public roads - this is called 'driver's ed'. To be considered legal by state laws, devices should only record footage when there is an evident need for evidence such as being involved in a crash or near-crash with another vehicle; at intersections where multiple lanes merge into one lane without warning signs; when stopped at a stop sign; or in construction zones. For drivers looking to limit the cost of owning and maintaining their device, manufacturers offer subscriptions for cloud storage that are available either as an annual fee or on a monthly basis. These plans will store your footage so you don't have to worry about running out of space if you want access to it again later on down the road.
In conclusion, we can say that using a dashcam is easy as using a smartphone. The instructions and settings are all easy to understand. We hope that this article has helped you in choosing the right dashcam for your car! I recommend reading the user's manual before attempting any change of settings or other features as the use cases may slightly differ

Gate Bridge is a railroad bridge in New York City, United States. The bridge carries two tracks of Amtrak's Northeast Corridor and one freight track between Astoria, Queens, and Port Morris, Bronx, via Randalls and Wards Islands. Its main span is a 1,017-foot (310 m) steel through arch across Hell Gate, a strait of the East River that separates Wards Island from Queens. The New York Connecting Railroad began construction of the bridge in 1912, and it opened in 1917. The main span, a two-hinged arch flanked by stone towers on either bank of Hell Gate, was the world's longest steel arch bridge until the Bayonne Bridge opened in 1931. It is one of the few rail connections from Long Island, of which Queens is part, to the rest of the United States. This panoramic photograph shows the main span of the Hell Gate Bridge, with Wards Island on the left of the image and Astoria on the right. A tugboat tows a barge in the foreground towards the Hell

Retrieved from "Unlike a sat nav or smartphone holder, you can't just attach a dash cam wherever you like. A dash cam must be fixed behind the rear-view mirror to ensure it doesn't obstruct your view while capturing both lanes of the road ahead. Most dash cams are attached using either double-sided tape or suction cups. Double-sided tape is more secure but can't be repositioned if needed, whereas suction cups offer more flexibility when attaching the camera for the first time. Once attached, a power lead from the dash board, ensuring your view of the road remains perfectly clear of wires and cables. Most dash cams plug into the car's cigarette lighter, so if you only have one socket and are planning to plug something else in (a phone charger, for example) you'll need to invest in an adaptor. If you want to use the parking mode on your dash cam or want the camera to automatically start up and switch off with your car's engine, you will need to "hardwire" the dash cam, which means connecting the power cable directly into your car's fuse box. While it's possible to hardwire a dash cam yourself, we recommend getting a professional engineer connect it for you as it will be safer and more efficient. A fitting service is available with dash cams purchased from the RAC Shop.
