In recent times, people constantly face challenges trying to participate in making art. There are individuals who claim that creativity is an innate ability, other persons are convinced that it might be acquired over the course of life. Not only do I go the latter opinion and but I tend to believe that desire coupled with persistence is key to creating music, paintings and other expressions of human ideas. Having enough motivation for regular practice, human beings can perform art even though they were not gifted in childhood. Motivation, as a main driver, generates enthusiasm in people and empowers them for systematic training. In a recent survey, it was found that it takes ten thousand hours to master talents. In other words, in order to improve creativity and reach a high level of artistry people need practice and persistence. On the other side of the coin, it is believed that some persons are born with extraordinary abilities. point of view is supported by plenty of examples, in which kids achieve unbelievable results in art. Indeed, there are outstanding children , the reason for their success is their self-motivation. Being able to absorb new abilities fast and being highly interested in particular activities, children are easily encouraged to develop their artistry , despite the numerous examples of gifted persons, I still hold the view that there is an alternative way to reach the same level of professionalism. Enthusiasm and practice build a solid ground for creativity, ensure the development of artistic talents.Unauthorized use and/or duplication of this material without express and written permission from this site's author and/or owner is strictly prohibited. Ví dụ: Những nghệ sĩ thiên tài như Leonardo Da Vinci hoặc Mozart thể hiện khả năng xuất chúng từ khi còn nhỏ, trước cả khi được đào tạo chính quy. Lý do 2: Tinh cách bẩm sinh ảnh hưởng đến sáng tạo nghệ thuật. Ví dụ: Người tư tin và kiên định dễ thử nghiệm ý tưởng mới, trong khi người sợ bị chỉ trích thường dễ dạt hơn. While some people tend towards the viewpoint that only those with artistic aptitude / talent possess the ability to produce artwork, I would have to support the idea that every person can achieve such a feat. On the one hand, there are clear arguments that you usually arises from people gifted with natural talents. One of the main reasons can be that making art requires special attributes such as creativity and perceptivity in order to express ideas through music, paintings and so on, which not everyone can easily cultivate. For example, many famous artists such as Leonardo Da Vinci and Mozart are believed to have exceptional artistic abilities at a very young age before they received any formal training. Another reason can be that art often involves the capability to provide and accept feedback, which is closely linked with innate personality traits. For instance, individuals who are naturally self-assured may find it easier to experiment with new styles or unconventional ideas, while others might be reluctant in fear of criticism. On the other hand, I agree with the viewpoint that artistry can be acquired by anyone, even if they lack natural talent. Firstly, training is vital in nurturing creativity. This is because art schools, workshops and autodidacticism can help people explore their artistic potential through knowledge, skills and inspiration. For example, it is recorded that Van Gogh did not show any special abilities as a young child. Only in his adulthood did he work extremely hard to master drawing and painting skills and later became the most influential figures in the history of Western art. Secondly, with the availability of modern technology, art creation is no longer limited to endowed individuals. Anyone can learn to compose music, draw a sketch or design fashionable outfits by having access to online tutorials and digital tools. In conclusion, although it is true that inborn qualities may give people a head start in artistic production, the ability to create art can be learned and everyone has the potential to become an artist. Art is a diverse range of creative activities that express the creator's imaginations. Naturally one can assume, to create art all you need is good imagination. However, some others believe that you need to learn special skills to become an artist. This essay shall discuss both the views in detail. Any person with a creative vision and ingenuity can create art forms such as writing poetry, painting, or composing a song or two. Drawing up a mental picture of your feelings and expressing them effectively on paper will make you an artist. For example some people are sometimes driven by longing or grief for someone, which makes them spill their feelings out in a song or a painting. This is why people feel that creating art is not that hard and can be attempted easily. On the contrary, there are people who firmly opine that without learning how to express creatively, imagination alone cannot help one become an artist. It requires years of training for people to become great artists. To become a musician for instance, one needs to learn all the fundamentals of rhythms and melodies; to play a guitar one needs to learn all the right chords. It doesn't help if your imagination is vivid; you need to know the correct technique of expressing the same to distinguish your creation from the ordinary mediocrities. To conclude, I'd like to say that as easy as it sounds, creating art is definitely not a piece of cake. Sure, one might be innate in some art forms, but enhancing that skill is very important to create masterpieces. (266 words) IELTS Essay # 23 Some people believe that anyone can create art such as painting, poetry, music and so on. Others think that a person should have special abilities to create art. Discuss both views and give your opinion. Art is one of the few things that is constantly modifying since new people are born and with them new concepts and ideas. There is a statement that a person who seeks to develop their personality in art should have special abilities to create something. Despite that, some believe that anyone can create different pieces of art. I would rather say that it is too radical to assume that someone needs to gain extraordinary capability and that the desire to create artistic works will be enough. To begin with, art itself doesn't have any boundaries, which means that your imagination is a key to the artistic world. Moreover, it is one of the ways to express yourself and release emotions; for instance, you can create something in the form of poetry, painting, or composing a song. Additionally, there are some individuals who spill their emotions out in poetry or a song after a hard period of their lives. This somehow helps them, and under such circumstances, a person may even discover some of his hidden talents and begin to develop in a certain area. So, most of those people randomly start their way in art without special abilities; furthermore, some become well-known artists, which only proves that knowing the basic nuances is enough in this sphere. On the contrary, others believe that creating items of art requires specialized skills that can only be acquired through experience and constant practice. That is true, that professional activity in this area requires more deep knowledge of the principals to produce truly exceptional works. To illustrate, in the process of creating a painting, the result should be visually appealing for the audience – texture, form, and color theory are essential things, just like for producing great music is critical using rhythm, melody, and harmony. To conclude everything said above, art is a way to express emotions, and at the same time, there are a lot of pieces that are very valuable for humanity as a form of time culture that is constantly evolving. Some people believe that specialized skills are necessary for creating exceptional works, while others support the idea that those who start in art without special abilities may even become famous artists one day.
