With accusations around Alabama Senator Roy Moore's candidate, there was a growing speculation that if Moore wins the election in December, other legislators might try to keep him out of the Senate. How do that? They can't stop Moore from taking the office. According to a 1969 Supreme Court decision, Congress may deny a place to someone if that person does not meet the constitutional requirements of being a U.S. citizen, does not reside in the state where he or she was elected to represent, and in the case of a U.S. Senator, he is not at least 30 years old. That's why Sen. Cory Gardner, a Republican from Colorado, who heads the Republican Senator Committee, has supported a non-Orthodox solution. In a statement issued on November 13, Gardner said that if Moore wins, "the Senate should vote to expel him. "In a scenario designed in this article by Politico, Moore first should have been sworn in the Senate should vote to expel him. "In a scenario designed in this article by Politico, Moore first should have been sworn in the Senate, so that the body could begin the process of hunting it. Article I, Section 5 of the Constitution of the United States gives the Senate the power to expel a member, provided that a majority of two thirds approve the resolution. As the 2012 Congress Research Service report explains, the expulsion of a senator is easier than removing a president of the United States from the office, requiring the House of Representatives to pass impeachment articles and the Senate to hold a trial and vote for condemnation. But that doesn't mean it would be easy. Only 15 senators were expelled into the nation's history, and the last was in 1862, according to a list on the US Senate site. And no one was expelled into the nation's history, and the last was in 1862, according to a list on the US Senate site. reasons for expulsion, but most cases "have generally dealt with cases of disloyalty perceived to the United States, or the condemnation of a criminal offence that has resulted in abuse of its official position." The story of the Senate's expulsions The first senator to be expelled was William Blount of Tennessee in 1787. Your offense: Trying to instigate a rebellion in Florida and Louisiana, then controlled by Spanish, which would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which in turn would allow the British to seize those colonies, which is a seize those colonies, which is a seize those colonies, which is a seize those colonies and the seize those colonies are seize those colonies. (Finally, later, the Senate tried to submit to him an impeachment process, but eventually decided that he was not an impeachable officer under Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution of the United States.) The other 14 expulsions occurred in the first of the Constitution of the United States. working on a book on Congress during the Civil War, explains in an e-mail that were "South speakers and border states that had deserted the Confederation, andessentially condemned as traitors by their former colleagues in the Senate." The last senator to be kicked out of the force, the Democrat Jesse D. Bright of Indiana, was voted on February 5, 1862. "He was a brilliant Norder, but he had expressed what he believed to be traditionally pro-Confederate views, and he had acknowledged the legitimacy of the Confederation in writing", says Bordewich. In all these cases, there was not much difficulty in getting the two-thirds needed. "With the Southerners they left, the Republicans held great majors", explains Bordewich. Failed Expulsion Attempts According to the Senate website, there have been nine more failed attempts to expel senators. In 1907, for example, Sen. Reed Smoot, a Utah Republican and leader in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was accused of taking a religious oath that made him ineligible to serve in the Senate, and of being part of a church that had once sanctioned polygamy. But Smoot survived a vote of 27 yeas to 43 nays. In 1919, Sen. Robert M. La Follette, a Republican of Wisconsin, was charged with disloyalty and sedition for delivering a 1917 speech against the entry of the United States into World War I. But in the end, the Senate voted 50 to 21 to dismiss the charge, and in the end paid La Follette $5,000 to cover her legal expenses. In addition, five other senators avoided an expulsion vote by resigning their office. The most recent was Sen. Robert Packwood, an Oregon Republican, resigned in a speech on the Senate floor in 1995, after the Senate Select Committee on Ethics published a lengthy report recommending his expulsion, according to the U.S. Senate website. Today's trial, the potential downfall of a senator would likely begin with an ethical complaint to the commission, which will investigate and recommend whether the full house should vote on expulsion. This could lead to an expulsion resolution which would have been put forward for a vote by the whole House. The defendant would probably testify at the trial." A senator could take the Fifth if he thought his testimony could be used against him in a court of law", says David F. Forte, a professor at the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and author of an essay on the expulsion clause in the Heritage Guide to the Constitution. "Beyond that, if he simply refused to testify, he could also be held in contempt." But even if the senator hadn't been punished, remaining silent might as well fire. "It would probably just increase your chances of losing", said Forte. That's interesting. The Sen. John Smith, an Ohio Democrat, who was unsuccessful in his expulsion from the Senate in 1808, was represented by a Baltimore attorney named Francis Scott Key, who He later became more famous for writing the texts to "The Star-Spangled Banner". Even if he won the vote, Smith ended up resigning anyway.
