VisualGPS ReportData-backed trends. Generative AI demos. Answers to your usage rights questions. Our original video podcast covers it allnow ondemand. Watch NowAs they say, we are the ones who eat. And although this seems like the typical popular statement that lacks scientific validity, the truth is that the more we progress in human nutrition and the more our knowledge about the role of food in the body advances, the more we realize that this phrase is totally true. And it is through the consumption of both solid and liquid foods that we obtain not only the necessary energy so that the more than 30 million million cells that make up our body have the necessary fuel to perform their physiological functions, but also matter to regenerate our tissues and organs. And in this context, nutrition is that vital functions and morphological functions, but also matter to regenerate our tissues and organs. And in this context, nutrition is that vital functions and morphological functions and morphological functions and morphological functions. Therefore, food is, without a doubt, the mainstay of human nutrition. They are substances that, with nutritional properties, after being assimilated and processed, allow our body to maintain its stable vital functions. As we well know, not all foods are the same. And thanks to this we have such varied foods that they make eating one of the greatest pleasures in life. But do we know exactly how foods are classified and what food groups exist? If you want to find the answer to this and many other questions, you are in the right place. And it is that in today's article and, of course, from the hand of the most prestigious scientific publications, we are going to analyze the properties of different types of food.ndice()A food is all that solid or liquid substance that has nutritional properties and that, when consumed, serves as nutritional support for a living being. Being of animal, vegetable or fungal origin, foods are substances that are ingested and introduced into the digestive system, which will be in charge of processing and degrading these foods into the simplest nutrients contained in them to assimilate them and provide them to the cells of the organism matter and energy to stay alive and functional. Each food product provides specific nutrients, which can be carbohydrates, fats or proteins (or a mixture of several), as well as vitamins, minerals, water and even non-nutritive substances, in the sense that they cannot be digested but, like Vegetable fiber does provide benefits at an organic level (in this case, it favors the functioning of digestion since it stimulates the activity of the intestinal flora). In this sense, whether it comes from an animal, a plant or a fungus, a food is an organic substance that provides essential nutrients and that can be assimilated and processed by the digestive system, allowing the obtaining of matter and energy for the organs and tissues of the body. And, obviously, the whole world of food is linked not only to the sensitive pleasure of eating, but to all kinds of social, cultural and psychological health aspects. Even so, beyond this oversimplified definition, the diversity and variety within foods is immense. Hence, always bearing in mind that each food is unique in terms of nutritional properties, it has been necessary to classify them into different groups to facilitate their study within the enormous diversity of food products, it has been absolutely necessary, in the context of the study of Human Nutrition, to classify foods into different families. And we have done this according to different families. And we have done this according to different families. Let us, then, analyze the classes of food according to all these parameters. 1. Energy foodsWhen it comes to function, food can be energy, builder, or regulator. Energy foods are those whose consumption It mainly gives us energy, but rather to they provide energy, having in its composition mostly carbohydrates or fats, the nutrients that provide energy, but rather to they provide us with the material that the body needs to renew itself. Thus, they are foods rich in protein and minerals. Regulatory foods are those that do not provide energy or matter, but are a source of substances whose consumption makes it possible to have the elements that modulate the body's metabolism and that they exert physiological functions that keep us stable. So, we talk about vitamins and minerals.4. Simple foodsSimple foods are those that, in their composition, they only have one type of nutrient. It is something unusual, since most of them are complex, but we could include here salt (which only provides minerals) and, if we consider it a food, water.5. Complexed that, in their composition, they only have one type of nutrient. It is something unusual, since most of them are complex, but we could include here salt (which only provides minerals) and, if we consider it a food, water.5. foodsComplex foods are the majority and are those that are made up of several different types of nutrients. For example, fruits provide not only carbohydrates in the form of sugars, but they are also a source of vitamins and mineral salts. Or red meat, which provides both proteins and fats of animal origin. 6. Group I foodsDepending on the nutrients they provide, the so-called "food wheel" has been developed, which distinguishes seven main food groups. Group 1 foods include milk and dairy products. Rich mainly in protein, they are builder foods. They also have an energetic function that depends on the amount of fat they incorporate. 7. Group II foods Group 2 foods include meat, fish and egg.
They continue to have a building function and it is the food group that incorporates the proteins with the greatest biological power, as well as minerals such as iron and vitamins of group B, which are essential for their regulatory function. White meat is healthier than red meat since it has less fat and fish is especially healthy for its supply of omega 3s. Group 3 foods include potatoes, legumes, and nuts. Due to their contribution of vitamins and proteins of vegetable origin, they are also important in the construction function. Group IV foods Group 4 foods include greens and vegetables. They practically do not provide carbohydrates, fats or proteins, so they do not have a building or energy function. But, yes, they are a fantastic source of vitamins and minerals, so their function is mainly regulatory. At the same time, many provide fiber, a carbohydrate that stimulates digestion but is not digested, so it does not provide calories. 10. Group V foods Group 5 foods include fruits. Their regulatory function is similar to those of the previous group, as they are a fantastic source of vitamins. But, in this case, due to its carbohydrates in the form of fructose, glucose and sucrose, but their caloric intake is low compared to other groups where these carbohydrates predominate.11. Group VI foodsGroup 6 foods with a very important energy function. Those that we should prioritize are those that provide complex carbohydrates (those that give energy little but for a short time), such as sweets, cookies, pastries, jam, sugar, flour, etc. they can be consumed, but in moderation. Complex carbohydrates should be the mainstay of our diet and simple carbohydrates should represent less than 10% of the daily caloric intake.12. Group VII foodsWe finish the food wheel with the foods of group 7, where we include fats, oil and butter. They have a mainly energetic function, although also, in the case of healthy fats, a regulatory function. It is important that the diet is rich in unsaturated fats (blue fish, avocado, olive oil, corn, eggs, legumes ...), low in saturated fats (red meat, butter, cream, whole milk, ice cream ...) and the most restricted possible in trans fats (ultra-processed, industrial pastries, cookies, potato chips). Fats are not bad. They are essential. But you have to eat healthy ones.13. Food of animal originWe end with the last parameter, the one that classifies foods according to their origin. Foods of animal without consumption of morphological parts, are obtained from some part of their life cycle (milk, eggs, honey, etc.).14. Foods of plant originPlant-based foods are all those products that grow directly from the ground. These are foods that consist of the consumption of morphological parts of organisms from the plant kingdom. This includes fruits, vegetables, vegetables, vegetables. nuts and, ultimately, all that food that does not come from an animal. 15. Foods of fungal origin, which consist of all those products intended for human consumption that do not come from an animal or a plant, but from the kingdom of fungal origin, which consist of all those products intended for human consumption of the morphological parts of the multicellular fungi of the fungal phylum of the basidiomycetes. In other words: mushrooms. A group of fungi with more than 25,000 species within which there are organisms suitable for human consumption. In fact, there are more than 1,000 species within which there are organisms suitable for human consumption. to food that is prepared and served very quickly, first popularized in the 1950s in the United States. While any meal with low preparation time can be considered fast food, typically the term refers to food sold in a restaurant or store with preheated or precooked ingredients, and served to the customer in a packaged form for take-out/take-away. Fast food restaurants are traditionally separated by their ability to serve food via a drive-through. The term "fast food" was recognized in a dictionary by MerriamWebster in 1951. Substance consumed for nutritionThis article is about food for all organisms. For food for humans, see Human food. For other uses, see Food (disambiguation). "Foodstuffs" redirects here. For the New Zealand grocery company, see Foodstuffs (company). Display of various foodsFood is any substance consumed by an organism for nutritional support. Food is usually of plant, animal, or fungal origin and contains essential nutrients such as carbohydrates, fats, proteins, vitamins, or minerals. The substance is ingested by an organism and assimilated by the organism's cells to provide energy, maintain life, or stimulate growth. Different species of animals have different feeding behaviours that satisfy the needs of their metabolisms and have evolved to fill a specific ecological niche within specific geographical contexts. Omnivorous humans are highly adaptable and have adapted to obtaining food in many different ecosystems. Humans generally use cooking to prepare food for consumption. The majority of the food energy required is supplied by the industrial food industry, which produces food through intensive agriculture and distributes it through complex food processing and food distribution systems. This system of conventional agriculture relies heavily on fossil fuels, which means that the food and agriculture relies heavily on fossil fuels, which means that the food and agricultural systems are one of the major contributors to climate change, accounting for as much as 37% of total greenhouse gas emissions.[1]The food system has a significant impact on a wide range of other social and political issues, including sustainability, biological diversity, economics, population growth, water supply, and food security. Food Protection, the World Resources Institute, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization, and the International Food Information Council. Food is any substance consumed to provide nutritional support and energy to an organism. [2][3] It can be raw, processed, or formulated and is consumed to provide nutritional support and energy to an organism. Minerals (e.g., salts) and organic substances (e.g., vitamins) can also be found in food.[4] Plants, algae, and some microorganisms use photosynthesis to make some of their own nutrients.[5] Water and fiber have low energy densities, or calories, while fat is the most energy-dense component.[3] Some inorganic (non-food) elements are also essential for plant and animal functioning.[7]Human food can be classified in various ways, either by related content or by how it is processed.[8] The number and composition of food groups that describe their origin and relative nutritional function: Vegetables and Fruit, Cereals and Bread, Dairy, and Meat.[9] Studies that look into diet quality group food into whole grains/cereals, refined grains/cereals, refin Health Organization use a system with nineteen food classifications: cereals, roots, pulses and nuts, milk, eggs, fish and shellfish, meat, insects, vegetables, fruits, fats and oils, sweets and savory snacks.[13]A typical aquatic food webIn a given ecosystem, food forms a web of interlocking chains with primary producers at the bottom and apex predators at the top.[14] Other aspects of the web include detrovores (that eat detritis) and decomposers (that break down dead organisms).[14] Primary producers include algae, plants, bacteria and protists that acquire their energy from sunlight.[15] Primary consumers are the herbivores that consume the plants, and secondary consumers are the carnivores that consume those herbivores. Some organisms, including most mammals and birds, have diets consisting of both animals and plants, and are considered omnivores. [16] The chain ends with the apex predators, the animals that have no known predators in its ecosystem.[17] Humans are considered apex predators.[18] Humans are omnivores, finding sustenance in vegetables, fruits, cooked meat, milk, eggs, mushrooms and seaweed.[16] Cereal grain is a staple food that provides more food energy worldwide than any other type of crop.[19] Corn (maize), wheat, and rice account for 87% of all grain production worldwide.[20][21][22] Just over half of the world's crops are used to feed humans (55 percent grown as animal feed and 9 percen absorbed and used to transform water and carbon dioxide in the air or soil into oxygen and glucose. The oxygen and glucose stored as an energy reserve. [25] Photosynthetic plants, algae and certain bacteria often represent the lowest point of the food chains, [26][27] making photosynthesis the primary source of energy and food for nearly all life on earth.[28]Plants also absorb important nutrients and minerals from the air, natural waters, and soil.[29] Carbon, oxygen and hydrogen are absorbed from the soil for plant growth are nitrogen, phosphorus and soil.[29] Carbon, oxygen and hydrogen are absorbed from the soil for plant growth are nitrogen, phosphorus and soil.[29] Carbon, oxygen and hydrogen are absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant growth are nitrogen, phosphorus and soil.[29] Carbon, oxygen and hydrogen are absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients absorbed from the soil for plant survival.[30] The three main nutrients are not potassium, with other important nutrients including calcium, sulfur, magnesium, iron boron, chlorine, manganese, zinc, copper molybdenum and nickel. [30] Bacteria and other microorganisms also form the lower rungs of the food chain. They obtain their energy from photosynthesis or by breaking down dead organisms, waste or chemical compounds the food chain. Some form symbiotic relationships with other organisms to obtain their nutrients.[31] Bacteria provide a source of food for protozoa,[32] who in turn provide a source of food for other organisms such as small invertebrates.[33] Other organisms that feed on bacteria include nematodes, fan worms, shellfish and a species of snail. In the marine environment, plankton (which includes bacteria, archaea, algae, protozoa and microscopic fungi)[34] provide a crucial source of food to many small and large aquatic organisms. Without bacteria, archaea, algae, protozoa and microscopic fungi)[34] provide a crucial source of food to many small and large aquatic organisms. Since the advent of the industrial process for nitrogen fixation, the Haber-Bosch Process, the majority of ammonia in the world is human-made.[35]Foods from plant sources for nitrogen fixation, the Haber-Bosch Process, the majority of ammonia in the world is human-made. described fruits such as the tomato, squash, pepper and eggplant or seeds like peas commonly considered the remains of botanically described fruits after grains, nuts, seeds and fruits used as vegetables are removed. [40] Grains can be defined as seeds that humans eat or harvest, with cereal grains (oats, wheat, rice, corn, barley, rye, sorghum and millet) belonging to the Poaceae (grass) family. [41] and pulses coming from the Fabaceae (legume) family. [42] Whole grains are foods that contain all the elements of the original seed (bran, germ, and endosperm).[43] Nuts are dry fruits, distinguishable from dry fruits (distinguishable from dry fruits (distinguishable from dry fruits, distinguishable from dry fruits (distinguishable from dry fruits), citrus (oranges, lemon), melons (watermelon, cantaloupe), Mediterranean fruits (grapes, fig), tropical fruits (banana, pineapple).[40] Vegetables refer to any other part of the plant that can be eaten, including roots, stems, leaves, flowers, bark or the entire plant itself.[44] These include root vegetables (potatoes and carrots), bulbs (onion family), flowers (cauliflower and broccoli), leaf vegetables (spinach and lettuce) and stem vegetables (celery and asparagus).[45][44]The carbohydrate, protein and lipid content of plants is highly variable. Carbohydrates are mainly in the form of starch, fructose, glucose and other sugars.[36] Most vitamins are found from plant sources, with the exception of vitamin D and vitamin B12. Minerals can also be plentiful or not. Fruit can consist of up to 90% water, contain high levels of simple sugars that contribute to fleshy fruit (excepting Bananas) vegetables are high in starch, [46] potassium, dietary fiber, folate and vitamins and low in fat and calories. [47] Grains are more starch based[36] and nuts have a high protein, fiber, vitamin E and B content.[40] Seeds are a good source of food for animals because they are abundant and contain fiber and healthful fats, such as omega-3 fats.[48][49] Complicated chemical interactions can enhance or depress bioavailability of certain nutrients. Phytates can prevent the release of some sugars and vitamins.[36] Animals that only eat plants are called herbivores, with those that mostly just eat fruits known as frugivores include a diverse range of species from annelids to elephants, chimpanzees and many birds. [52] [53] [54] About 182 fish consume seeds or fruit. [55] Animals (domesticated and wild) use as many types of grasses that have adapted to different locations as their main source of nutrients. [56] Humans eat thousands of plant species; there may be as many as 75,000 edible species of angiosperms, of which perhaps 7,000 are often eaten.[57] Plants can be processed into breads, pasta, cereals, juices and jams or raw ingredients such as sugar, herbs, spices and oils can be extracted.[36] Oilseeds are pressed to produce rich oils sunflower, flaxseed, rapeseed (including canola oil) and sesame.[58]Many plants and animals have coevolved in such a way that the fruit is a good source of nutrition for the animal, who then excretes the seeds some distance away, allowing greater dispersal.[59] Even seed predation process.[60][61] Insects are major eaters of seeds,[48] with ants being the only real seed dispersers.[62] Birds, although being major dispersers,[63] only rarely eat seeds as a source of food and can be identified by their thick beak that is used to crack open the seed coat.[64] Mammals eat a more diverse range of seeds, as they are able to crush harder and larger seeds with their teeth.[65]Various raw meatsAnimals are used as food either directly or indirectly. This includes meat, eggs, shellfish and dairy products like milk and cheese. [66] They are an important source of protein and are considered complete protein and are considered complete protein and the essential amino acids that the human body needs. [67] One 4-ounce (110g) steak, chicken breast or pork chop contains about 30 grams of protein. One large egg has 7 grams of protein. A 4-ounce (110g) serving of cheese has about 15 grams of protein. [67] Other nutrients found in animal products include calories, fat, essential vitamins (including B12) and minerals (including zinc, iron, calcium, magnesium). [67] Food products products produced by animals include milk produced by mammary glands, which in many cultures is drunk or processed into dairy products (cheese, butter, etc.). Eggs laid by birds and other animals are eaten and bees produce honey, a reduced nectar from flowers that is used as a popular sweetener in many cultures. Some cultures consume blood, such as in blood sausage, as a thickener for sauces, or in a cured, salted form for times of food scarcity, and others use blood in stews such as jugged hare. [68] Main article: TasteAnimals, specifically humans, typically have five different types of tastes: sweet, sour, salty, bitter, and umami. The differing tastes are important for distinguishing between foods that are nutritionally beneficial and those which may contain harmful toxins.[69] As animals have evolved, the tastes that provide the most energy are the most pleasant to eat while others are not enjoyable.[69] Water, while important for survival, has no taste [71]Sweetness is almost always caused by a type of simple sugar such as glucose or fructose, or disaccharides such as sucrose, a molecule combining glucose and fructose. [72] Sourness is caused by acids, such as vinegar in alcoholic beverages. Sour foods include citrus, specifically lemons and limes. Sour is evolutionarily significant as it can signal a food that may have gone rancid due to bacteria.[73] Saltiness is the taste of alkali metal ions such as sodium and potassium. It is found in almost every food in low to moderate proportions to enhance flavor. Bitter taste is a sensation considered unpleasant characterised by having a sharp, pungent taste. Unsweetened dark chocolate, caffeine, lemon rind, and some types of fruit are known to be bitter. Umami, commonly described as savory, is a marker of proteins and characteristic of broths and cooked meats.[74] Foods that have a strong umami flavor include cheese, meat and mushrooms.[75] Catfish have millions of taste buds covering their entire body. While most animals taste buds are located in their mouth, some insects taste receptors are located on their legs and some fish have taste buds (chickens have between 2000 and 4000,[78] while catfish can have more than a million.[77] Herbivores generally have more than carnivores as they need to tell which plants may be poisonous.[78] Not all mammals share the same tastes: some rodents can taste starch, cats cannot taste starch, cats cannot taste sweetness, and several carnivores (including hyenas, dolphins, and sea lions) have lost the ability to sense up to four of the five taste modalities found in humans.[80]Main articles Digestion Food is broken into nutrient components through digestive processes (chewing, peristalsis) and chemical processes (chewing, peristalsis) and chemical processes (chewing, peristalsis) and chemical processes (digestive enzymes and microorganisms).[82][83] The digestive enzymes and microorganisms).[82][83] The digestive enzymes and microorganisms of herbivores are very different as plant matter is harder to digest. mouths are designed for tearing and biting compared to the grinding action found in herbivores however have comparatively longer digestive tracts and larger stomachs to aid in digesting the cellulose in plants.[85][86]Main article: Food safetyAccording to the World Health Organization (WHO), about 600 million people worldwide get sick and 420,000 die each year from eating contaminated food, with about 550 million cases and 230,000 deaths from diarrhea each year. [88] Diarrhea is the most common illness caused by consuming contaminated food, with about 550 million cases and 230,000 deaths from diarrhea each year. [89]A 2003 World Health Organization (WHO) report concluded that about 30% of reported food poisoning outbreaks in the WHO European Region occur in private homes. [90] According to 325,000 hospitalizations and 5,000 deaths. [91] From 2011 to 2016, on average, there were 668,673 cases of foodborne illness and 21 deaths each year. Nverify(what isYN?) Infobox referencesChemical compound 3-MCPD (3-monochloropropane-1,2-diol) is an organic chemical compound with the formula HOCH2CH(OH)CH2Cl. It is a colorless liquid. The compound has attracted notoreity as the most common member of chemical food contaminants known as chloropropanols.[1] It is suspected to be carcinogenic in humans.[2]3-MCPD, together with its isomer 2-MCPD, is thought to be produced when fat-containing foods are treated at high temperatures with hydrochloric acid. Such treatment chlorides is thought to react with the glycerol backbone of lipids to produce 3-MCPD and 2-MCPD. Chlorination of glycerol gives the 3-MCPD the same compound can be produced by hydrolysis of epichlorohydrin.[3]In 2009, 3-MCPD was found in some East Asian and Southeast Asian sauces such as oyster sauce, Hoisin sauce, and soy sauce.[4] Using hydrochloric acid is far faster than traditional slow fermentation. A 2013 European Food Safety Authority report indicated margarine, vegetable oils (excluding walnut oil), preserved meats, bread, and fine bakery wares as major sources in Europe.[5]3-MCPD can also be found in many paper products treated with polyamidoamine-epichlorohydrin wet-strength resins.[6] The International Agency for Research on Cancer has classified 3-MCPD as Group 2B, "possibly carcinogenic to humans".[7] 3-MCPD is carcinogenic in rodents via a non-genotoxic mechanism.[8] It is able to cross the blood-testis barrier and bloodbrain barrier.[9] The oral LD50 of 3-chloro-1,2-propanediol is 152mg/kg bodyweight in rats.[10]3-MCPD also has male antifertility effects [10][11] and can be used as a rat chemosterilant.[12]The joint Food Standards which came into force in the EU United Kingdom Food Standards Agency (FSA) found in tests of various oyster sauces and soy sauces that 22% of samples contained 3-MCPD at levels considerably higher than those deemed safe by the European Union. About two-thirds of these samples also contained a second chloropropanol called 1,3-dichloropropane-2-ol (1,3-DCP) which experts advise should not be present at any levels in food. Both chemicals have the potential to cause cancer and the Agency recommended that the affected products be withdrawn from shelves and avoided.[14][15]In 2001, the FSA and Food Standards Australia New Zealand (FSANZ) singled out brands and products imported from Thailand, China, Hong Philippines, Ta Tun soy bean sauce from Taiwan, Tau Vi Yeu seasoning sauce and Soya bean sauce from China and Golden Mountain and Lee Kum Kee chicken marinade.[16][17][18]Between 2002 and 2004, relatively high levels of 3-MCPD and other chloropropanols were found in soy sauce and other foods in China.[19]In 2007, in Vietnam, 3-MCPD was found in toxic levels. In 2004, the HCM City Institute of Hygiene and Public Health found 33 of 41 sample of soy sauce with high rates of 3-MCPD, including six samples with up to 11,000 to 18,000 times more 3-MPCD than permitted, an increase over 23 to 5,644 times in 2001.[20] The newspaper Thanh Nien Daily commented, "Health agencies have known that Vietnamese soy sauce, the country's second most popular sauce after fish sauce after fish sauce, and Australians were advised to avoid soy sauce.[22]In November 2008, Britain's Food Standards Agency reported a wide range of household name food products from sliced bread to crackers, beefburgers and cheese with 3-MCPD above safe limits. Relatively high levels of the chemical were found in popular brands such as Mother's Pride, Jacobs crackers, John West, Kraft Dairylea and McVitie's Krackawheat. The same study also found relatively high levels in a range of supermarket own-brands, including Tesco char-grilled beefburgers, Sainsbury's Hot 'n Spicy Chicken Drumsticks and digestive biscuits from Asda. The highest level of 3-MCPD found in soy sauce was 93,000g/kg, 700 times higher. In 2006 the legal limit for 3-MCPD contained in acid-hydrolysed vegetable protein (HVP) and soy sauce was set at 20g/kg, the legislation was revised further in 2020 to limit the amount of 3-MCPD across all vegetable oils and fats as well as oils made from marine life which are either produced and for the legislation was revised further in 2020 to limit the amount of 3-MCPD across all vegetable protein (HVP) and soy sauce was set at 20g/kg, the legislation was revised further in 2020 to limit the amount of 3-MCPD across all vegetable oils and fats as well as oils made from marine life which are either produced and for the legislation was revised further in 2020 to limit the amount of 3-MCPD across all vegetable oils and fats as well as oils made from marine life which are either produced and for the legislation was revised further in 2020 to limit the amount of 3-MCPD across all vegetable oils and fats as well as oils made from marine life which are either produced and for the legislation was revised further in 2020 to limit the amount of 3-MCPD across all vegetable oils and fats as well as oils made from marine life which are either produced and fats are legislation was revised further and fats are legislatio made available for consumers or added as an ingredient to other foods. [23] In 2016, the occurrence of 3-MCPD in selected paper products to beverages was investigated.[24] Exposure to 3-MCPD from packaging material would likely constitute only a small percentage of overall dietary exposure when compared to the intake of processed oils/fats containing 3-MCPD is a versatile presence of 3- and 2-monochloropropanediol (MCPD), and their fatty acid esters, and glycidyl fatty acid esters in food". Infobox referencesChemical compound2-MCPD (2-chloropropane-1,3-diol) is an organic chemical compound with the formula ClCH(CH2(OH))2. It is a colorless liquid. The compound has attracted notoreity as a food contaminants. [1] It is suspected to be carcinogenic in humans. [2]2-MCPD, together with its isomer 3-MCPD, is thought to be produced when fatcontaining foods are treated at high temperatures with hydrochloric acid. Such treatments are sometimes used to accelerate protein hydrolysis, making food more digestable. In such a treatment chloride is thought to react with the glycerol backbone of lipids to produce 2- and 3-MCPD. Kuhlmann, Jan (2019). "2-Monochloropropanediol (2-MCPD), 3-
