you want to do each week/fortnight. Typically, this will involve vacuuming, cleaning windows and surfaces, and doing anything else that doesn't require more intricate work. This is for everything missed during regular ongoing cleaning. Think about all the grimy areas of bathrooms and kitchens, skirting boards and under sofas and pretty much anything else hiding in a nook or cranny or hard-to-reach area. Wondering how bad this could be? Run a finger over the top of the nearest bookcase! Again, this is priced at an hourly rate, somewhere between 15-25 per hour. End of Tenancy Cleaning: In order to receive back your tenancy deposit from a rental home, you usually need to hand back the property in very good condition. Landlords are notorious for taking a chunk of the deposit to cover a professional cleaning, and more often than not, you can get a better deal doing this beforehand! This type of clean is similar to a deep clean but with an empty property to ensure it is spotless for handover. This is priced at a fixed rate depending on the size of the property, usually between 10-300. Commercial Cleaning: This is priced at the same as regular cleaning but in a commercial setting. This is priced at the same rate of between 15-20, but bear in mind that the size of the property to cover is usually much larger. Benefits of Hiring a Professional Cleaner Here are some benefits of a professional cleaner: Convenience and Time Savings For busy households, especially those households with children and working adults, cleaning the home to a good standard is, and always has been, difficult. Usually, these deep cleaning tasks are reserved for weekends when people would much rather be doing something much more fun. As such, these households have turned to professional cleaners to keep their offices and facilities clean. Previously, a full-time cleaner may have been employed, which comes with much greater expense and responsibility. Additionally, having specialised cleaning policy for their ESR. Employment and Economic Growth By hiring and utilising professional cleaning services, you are helping a growing industry continue to grow and contribute to the economy. Since 2013, there has been a 21% increase in turnover for the cleaning services industry, and this number continues to increase. The pandemic that the world faced only a few years ago raised awareness about the importance of cleanliness and hygiene. This has, in turn, led many businesses and people to prioritise this more frequently to ensure safe environments. As a result, cleaning companies have been much more in demand to help achieve this increased level of cleaning services. Firstly, the location of your home can impact the price of professional cleaning services. If you live in a rural area, there may be travel incorporated into the price, and large urban areas may have quite a lot of ground to cover, you will need the cleaner for longer, and if there is a lot of clutter, it will take the cleaner longer to finish the job. Lastly, the frequency of the service will affect the price, although some cleaning booked in bulk and guaranteed over a period of time. Cleaner Prices This table below breakdown the cost of cleaner prices: Type of Clean Low Range High Range Average Cost Agency (per hour) 15 25 20 Independent (per hour) 10 20 15 Weekly Clean a 3-bedroom house (1 session per week) 40 60 50 Clean a bungalow (1 session per week) 25 40 32.50 Clean a flat (1 session per week) 20 30 25 There are very few additional costs that could crop up with a professional cleaning service. The cleaners you employ will provide their own specialist equipment, cleaning equipment, and chemicals, should they be required. If you live quite far away from the company you employ, maybe in a rural area away from towns and cities, you may incur some additional travel expenses, but these will always be discussed upfront. There may be some occasions when you may periodically want your carpets steam cleaned, maybe every 3 months. This will be in addition to the fee you pay, and again, the company you employ will provide you with a detailed price list for all of the additional options available to you. Lastly, and this is completely optional, some customers like to leave a small tip to a regular cleaner around Christmas time. But this isnt expected and is purely an optional tip. The total cost for cleaning a a 3-bedroom home per month: 220 Labour Costs and Time Frames Cleaning services are essentially entirely labour-cost-based as there are no materials to budget for. However, there are still some interesting differences between services and agency cleaning services differ in price slightly. Agencies have a bank of cleaners in employment, meaning they usually have better availability, particularly for late notice cleans or additional requirements. The reason this is more expensive by a small margin is due to the admin team that drives the bank of cleaners, such as reception staff, schedulers, financial teams and others, not to mention marketing campaigns and other similar expenses. Now, independent cleaning services are often cheaper because they have such a smaller team with fewer overheads and outgoings. While you may struggle with any late notice bookings, you will get a cheaper and more personal service from the same person each and every time. When you book a cleaning service, they will be very clear about what is price can change as you agree with the cleaning company on what jobs you want to complete each week. DIY vs Professional Cleaning Of course, you can always opt to clean your home yourself and save yourself and similar to washing a car. Its incredibly possible to do this yourself, yet so many people choose to instead pay 10 for a car wash by someone else, and almost always, they receive a better result than they would have if they had chosen to do it themselves. On this point, the level of cleaning that professional cleaners can achieve far exceeds that of non-professionals. Not only do they possess the skills to clean more extensively, but they also do it much quicker and more efficiently. In some scenarios, cleaning your home DIY is just not tenable. For example, if you are moving house, you have so many jobs to complete, from packing, unpacking, decorating, contracts and much more, all while juggling work and maybe children and animals. Extensive cleaning of a home you are leaving, or even one you are moving into, is just out of the question. Ultimately, it is a very small price to pay to save a lot of time and effort while also receiving a much higher level of cleanliness. Compliance and Regulations You may be surprised to find out that in the UK professional cleaners are subject to quite a few regulations and certification requirements in order to achieve a high standard of service and industry standards are adopted by professional companies and often laid out by organisations like the British Institute of Cleaning Science (BICSc), the Cleaning & Support Services Association (CSSA), and the British Cleaners Association (BCA). Here are some of the key regulations and certifications that apply: Health & Safety: Professional cleaning businesses in the UK must adhere to the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) regulations
This regulation requires cleaning companies to control risks associated with any of the chemicals. Insurance Requirements: Professional cleaning businesses must have public liability insurance to cover any potential third-party claims and employers liability insurance if they employ staff. Essentially, these insurances protect against claims of property damage or injury and are essential for avoiding financial risks for both the customer and the business or person providing services. Industry Certifications: Now, this one isnt mandatory. However, certifications from BICSc or membership with CSSA or BCA can enhance a companys credibility, so you may find that many advertise that they possess them. BICSc offers a Cleaning Professionals Skills Suite, which outlines competency standards for cleaning tasks, and CSSA membership, which requires adherence to a code of practice. It also offers resources to support industry best practices. FAQs Include a section with frequently asked questions, such as: How often should I hire a clean every week, and while this is costly for some if you have the financial capability, why not? If you have a larger home, some people around on the weekends for dinner parties or socialising. It really is up to the customer in this regard, and you can speak to a cleaning company to find out how much time your home would likely need, what the availability for the cleaners is like and how much they charge. From here, you can work out what you need and what you can afford. What should I do to prepare for a cleaner's visit? The main way to prepare your home for a cleaner's visit is to remove as much clutter as possible. Of course, the cleaner is there to clean, but this doesn't really include things like picking up toys and litter. All this does is waste the time you have paid for for actual cleaning. So, the best way to prepare is to clear up as much as you can so the cleaner can get straight to the cleaning. Are there long-term contracts required, or can I book one-off services? Typically, youll receive much better pricing and deals when you book a long-term contract, and not only that, but the cleaners will be better and quicker. However, one-off services are always available, especially for things like deep cleans, end-of-tenancy cleans and commercial cleaning. Ultimately, cleaners are always happy to have your business and will work to whatever your requirements are, both for the cleaning service? If youre unhappy with the cleaning you have received, the best thing to do is to speak with the cleaning service and explain what you are unhappy with. It might be the case that what you are looking for wasnt included in the quote or that the cleaners have done something that some people prefer, but you dont. Essentially, the cleaners and cleaning company are there to service you and your home, so communication is key to making sure everyone is on the same page and has a great professional relationship. Finding and Hiring a Cleaner Finding and hiring a cleaner is probably the most important aspect of the journey. You need to make sure that you pick someone that you get a good feeling with, has great references, and you are comfortable having in your home. Nowadays, it's really easy to find a cleaning company to service your area along with helpful customer reviews, ratings, and services offered, and you can filter the results based on a number of things. As mentioned earlier, keep an eye out for professional affiliations such as BICSc or the CSSA. Memberships with these organisations often mean that the company or individual adheres to specific standards and codes that will assure quality. There are many helpful apps and websites like Helpling and Housekeep that will make it easy to book vetted cleaners for residential services - you can even fill in a short form for a more accurate quote. For commercial cleaning, there are similar websites that can be found on search engines that provide the same resources. Word of mouth can never be underestimated when it comes to finding services for your home. Personal recommendations are unbiased, and you can make them directly through social media platforms like Facebook. An important thing to note is to get more than one quote. Dont just settle for the first price based on your area and requirements. It wont take long to get 4-5 quotes using the tips above, so make sure youre not paying more than you need to.
