The Greek verb dynamai appears to have been an original nasal present with the -n- infix generalized throughout the paradigm. If an Indo-European base *deyh2- (or *deh2u-?) "to fit together, join" is reconstructible on the basis of Tocharian B tsuwa " (it) adhered, cohered," Germanic *taujan- "to prepare, make" (see taw entry 1), then dy-n-a- may be allied; assumed is an approximate sense development "be joined" > "fit, be suitable" > "be capable."
