Good 401 (k) day, everyone! Yes, it is a real day, and also a real importance! Since most American money is totally invested in their counterparts 401 (k) and respective. Trillions and trillions of it! (It doesn't take us so that I am too lazy to search for it right now, but I know that you know everything!:) So, before you get to today's goodness, make sure the following two things are in place with yours: a) you are getting 100% of your free correspondence from your employer because the money free!! That is better than no free money, and especially when you do not even notice the difference of being deducted from your salary! And b) that the money that is sitting there is actually invested in something smart, and not ridiculous as cash or other "Investments" that are sucking your money into taxes vs behave for you. Take a look at Bloom.com If you don't even know where to start and are literally login for you and analyze / move your $$$ around where it's better sense for you and your goals. They're great, and you can find my mini-review here. [The link to Bloom is a affiliation link, since partner we went] now with that PSA out of hand, I had a â€"that you prefer ... for you! We didn't finish one of these forever, and thought it would be fun to compare your answers here with those we got when we interviewed over 200 financial bloggers for a new project on Rockstar Finance we just launched (details in A po). Here's the question below. Give a little good thought, and then leave your answer below in the comments so you can all of us. It's harder than it is before! â€"You should prefer ... I Have all the knowledge from every financial book in the world - or â€"Do you get $100,000 in cash? Â € Now remember, think about it for a while before you go with your integrated answer What could you do with all that knowledge?? What could you do with all that money? After you're approaching the other one? Are they both equally important? Initially I chose â€"All the knowledge - myself, because obviously you can turn that knowledge into money even more money over time, as long as you act, but after sitting on it for some I finished his wife Mind on it and that's why: if I had all the knowledge from the books I would not have had a reason to read more! That's half the fun! And Plus, $100k Compounding at this time means a handful more years closer to early retirement where I can therefore - Wait for â€"Read more Financial Books! (Bam!) Now, of course, this is * current * me and not * old * me when I didn't have 1/100 of the knowledge I do now in money, so our army definitely travel here. In both cases, he defeats for a whilethe next batch of words I write on the computer here, so go back and leave your answers below in the comments :) Our new Rockstar project : a crowdsourced ratio (and directories !) of Best and Worst Personal Finance Books as rated by 200+ Bloggers! Some of you may have already seen this if you are a fellow blogger and/or follower of my sister site RockstarFinance.com (where we do a lot of care and collaboration,) but basically this week we finally launched a project I was DYING about to release and was super proud to do it:) After leaving the words of that killer book, Essentialism, seep in for a while, an idea finally clicked on how I could use my only âšuper powerâ as they say, to really do something fresh in space. And not only cool, but also HELPFUL for our entire community! And this was leveraging the collective minds of the financial blogging community to pump intuition on a targeted financial topic every month, to give us a SOLID resource from people who love and obsess about this stuff the most. And we started it with a report on the best, and most overrated, books on personal finance, as well as a quarrel of other interesting nuggets like that would be pretty above not to turn it into a snooze party:) You can see a glimpse of the report here before clicking on it. But here's the second interesting thing that came out of all this â not only do we now have this nifty report to scan through, but it also gave us the opportunity to build a new directory of BOOKS to compliment our Blogger directory tool! So now EVERYONE can access this collective-malgama mind of recommendations to better help them on their journey to financial literacy. Win, everybody! So all he said, here are the two places you can now visit anytime you are looking for a great new financial ledger to collect (or ignore â bah:!) And yet â this is only month #1:.) We are already in the works of building the next report and directory based on another focused category, and our goal here is to continue to produce these 1-2 punches monthly until we cross them all off, or more possibly bloggers get tired of answering all our questions, hahaha... Either way, I'm thrilled about how our first race went, and I thank EACH EVERY ONE for you who participated and made this fun little idea a reality! Getting this new project off the ground was just the blast I needed to feel excited again, so thank you all mucho from the bottom of my heart and I don't see the time to do more1:) Please enjoy your weekends out there, and we'll see you back here on Monday for another riveting discussion about money, money, money! XOXO, PS: Just like 401 (k) Day, that $100,000 note above is also real! It is a $100,000 gold certificate that was used for inter-agency government transactions by day and since retired, bringing the Of a beautiful Woodrow Wilson. It is also very illegal possessing in a personal collection (it has never been thought for the public.) so if you ever see one in real life is or false or hangs with the mafia :) you can visit one at National Museum of American History though! Jay. Jay. He was talking about money, collecting coins, smashing hip-hop, and dating his three beautiful boys. You can check all its online projects on jmoney.biz. Thank you for reading the blog! Wednesday, TIME has published its first list 100 NEXT to recognize emerging activists, actors, athletes and others, expanding to its most influential list published earlier this year. Since 2004, the TIME 100 list has highlighted the most influential people in the world, and new in 2019, the TIME 100 NEXT "spot" brings out 100 rising stars that are shaping the future of business, entertainment, sport, politics, science, health and more." The winners range from 14 years (Alysa Liu) to 44 years (Joint List head Ayman Odeh), and more than half (53) are women and girls. Each of the winners of the TIME 100 NEXT has been profiled by a star. Michelle Yeoh sings the praises of Crazy Rich Asians co-star Henry Golding, and dream director Hampton talks about his collaboration with the director of Wild Seed Wanuri Kahiu. These profiles, though short, open their eyes on how the TIME 100 NEXT stars have already begun to model their respective fields. Two of the authors listed below made the cut to be on the cover of the November 13 of TIME. Awkwafina, also known as Nora Lum, and Chanel Miller join Camila Cabello, Carlos Alvarado Quesada, Emily Weiss and Zion Williamson for the six unique covers printed for the number 100 NEXT of TIME. The authors below and see the full list TIME 100 NEXT here.Awkwfina's NYC by Nora LumDalla star by Crazy Rich Asians and Goodbye comes this fun guide to New York City. The NYC of Awkwafina contains compact tourist guides in the city districts, complete with public transport maps and fun routes and curiosities on what you will see along the way. You know my name as Chanel Miller Known for years as Emily Doe, Chanel Miller stepped forward in 2019 to prove himself the victim of Stanford's rape case. In Know My Name, Miller traces aggression and its consequences, including his reaction to the tremendously light condemnation of the rapist condemned Brock Turner. Fierce: How Competing for Myself Changed Everything by Aly RaismanDalla due volte ginnasta olimpica Aly Raisman arrives this biography on his life and career. Fierce focuses on Raisman's experiences in the gymnastics world, including his struggles to maintain a healthy body image while undergoing bullying for his athletic construction. Look Both Ways: A Tale Told in 10 Blocks by Jason Reynolds 2019 National Book Award for Young People's Literature, Jason Reynolds' Look Both Ways combines the stories of 10 students as they return home from school. It's an impressive portrait ofschool life, and one you don't want to lose. Normal people of Sally Rooney In this 2019 bestseller, two unlikely friends — a shy girl and a popular guy — from a small city high school are once again drawn into the other's orbit in college, where their social roles have been turned completely on their ears. "Five years ago, China's top-10 brands were American," says Kevin Swanepoel, One Club's marketing and interactive director, the international advertising organization. "This year, the only American brand in the top 5 was Coke." But brand-building is a slow game, and creativity-quashing Cultural Revolution has left the country with little force in bourgeoisis skills such as marketing, advertising, customer service, and imaginative thinking. This is why the One Club has held advertising seminars in China over the last four years. The idea: to feed the wide demand for creative work that is developing as multinational ad agencies establish beachheads in the country and local shops spread out. The anxiety of students to learn is surprising; their execution often comes short. "When we ask a Chinese student to do an assignment, we usually get a Chinese version of an American pop poster," says Swanepoel. "We say, 'Guys, you have to own your story.' " So also with Chinese fashion designers, says Joanne Ooi, creative director of Shanghai Tang. "They are very western. They have no confidence in their cultural roots." But there are signs that the younger generation is finally embracing its culture. Huang Hung, CEO of China Interactive Media Group, Beijing-based producer of luxury lifestyle magazines and TV programs, says that a harvest of young designers is now emerging who can report their heritage without falling into kitsch. Even more encouraging, says Hung, is that Chinese consumer attitudes towards brands have changed dramatically in a few years. Four years ago, he says, a survey of his company found that "flaunting your status" was the number one priority in choosing a brand. This year, number one priority was design. design.
