Milieu, French for "middle space," where the patient is placed in a controlled environment that demonstrates how to interact with other people in order to accurately assess and deal with common real life situations.A milieu therapist is the primary contact and liaison between patients, medical staff members and the patient's family. The therapist must apply the principles of milieu therapy to control every aspect of the patient's environment to ensure each facet of the surroundings and atmosphere benefits the recovery process.Milieu therapists analyze the needs of the patient on an individual basis. The patient's problems may include eating disorders, substance abuse, anger problems, suicidal tendencies and more. The job further entails getting the family involved in recovery process so that every person who is in close, personal contact with the patient knows what is expected, as explained by the O-School.Article continues below this adDuties in a job description of a milieu counselor include preparing a plan of action that involves group and one-on-one sessions. The goal of in-patient treatment is to create an environment that is as close to the patient's home life as possible so that when the patient returns to his life, he has learned the skills necessary to handle issues he faces on a day-to-day basis.Your challenge will be to find and recognize trigger mechanisms that elicit inappropriate behavior, and develop a plan of action that teaches the patient skills to correct the behavior. Modeling a program will help the patient prepare to deal with real-life situations in an acceptable manner.The minimum education requirements vary according to the scope of responsibilities outlined in the milieu counselor's job description. Typically, a milieu therapist needs undergraduate nursing skills or an associate degree in social work or psychology. Some organizations require a bachelor's degree in one of the health sciences, such as psychology, sociology or human resources.Article continues below this adEntry-level technician jobs are possible with a high school diploma. For example, Arms Acres in New York hires crisis milieu counselors with a high school diploma to assist professional counseling staff. Other requirements may include basic life support, or BLS, training. A job applicant's references and past work experience is taken into consideration when seeking a position as a milieu therapist.According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as of 2020, the median annual pay for a mental health, substance abuse and behavioral disorder counselors is $47,660 per year, or $22.91 per hour.
