If you're using a stock Android phone, you'll find caller ID and spam filtering mandatory. To enable Caller ID, go to Settings and select Caller ID. In most cases, you'll see an option to block calls from unknown numbers. This is a great way to protect your privacy when dealing with strangers. But there are some drawbacks to hiding Caller ID. However, you can customize this feature by editing it in the Contacts app. Another way to get additional information is to download third-party apps. You can find a wide variety of these applications in Google Play. In this guide, we will walk you through the process. Once you've installed the app, you can turn on Caller ID on your Android phone. Samsung phones have a built-in feature called Smart Call, which uses a third-party database for caller ID information instead of the carrier's information. This feature helps protect you from unwanted spam calls while letting you connect with businesses. However, the Hiya lookup database may not be as accurate as other databases, so you should be careful when you use it. To disable the caller ID on your Samsung phone, open the settings menu. You'll see a list of available settings. You can choose the caller's name or number by tapping the phone's name or the number itself. You'll see that the Caller ID will not display when you're in Easy mode, but you can still use it for outgoing calls. To test whether the settings are working, call a number that you don't recognize to see if it works. If the name doesn't appear, try turning off the caller ID feature. Sometimes the caller may have disabled the feature or their CNAM record is not updated. This issue can be easily solved. You can also enable or disable Read caller names on your Samsung phone by going to settings. Once enabled, you can choose between two modes: Always and Disabled. To enable caller ID on your Samsung phone, tap the Always setting. Where is Call Settings in Android? The new feature on Android 6.0, Marshmallow, is the Call Settings option. Moreover, it makes it easier to identify prank calls and scams. Here are the best ways to unhide Caller ID on your Android phone. Hide Caller ID: If you are worried about receiving prank calls from a stranger, or you simply don't feel comfortable answering unknown calls, hiding your phone number may help. Hide Caller ID on Android phones is possible thanks to an in-built option on most smartphones. To do this, open the Phone app on your device and click the Settings option. This can be a source of the problem. The best way to fix this problem is to go into your Samsung's settings and open the Apps folder. From there, search for Caller ID and tap it. If this method doesn't fix the issue, try clearing the phone's cache, storage, and data. You can also reboot your phone by pressing the power button for a few seconds. Android Guides Caller ID is the technology that allows any phone to display the number of other phones connecting to it. If you're making a call, that's your outbound caller ID. If you're receiving a call, it's the inbound caller ID that you see. Changing the caller ID of inbound calls is something you can do easily on any smartphone, including Androids. Changing your outbound caller ID isn't something you can control other than choosing to display or hide your number. Android phones have three options for changing the ID people see on their phones when you call them. Network Default: This depends on the plan you have with your carrier. Usually, this is your phone number unless you blocked your number with the carrier. Show Number: This displays your phone number. Hide Number: This hides your phone number, giving the person you're calling a "Private Number" notification instead of your phone number. To find these options, open the Phone app on your Android, tap the "More" icon (3 dots) in the upper-right corner of the screen, select "Settings," and then "Call Settings." Next, tap "Additional Settings" and then finally select "Caller ID." As USA Today notes, using the Hide Number option is the same as when you use *67 to block your number, which you do from your Android phone. Keep in mind that many people choose to ignore private numbers and may have their phones automatically ignore those calls, block them or send them to voicemail. Caller ID automatically displays the phone number for anyone who calls your Android phone unless that number is already in your Contacts app. In this case, the name of the person also appears. To change what appears on your phone when someone calls, change the information in your Contacts app. One feature you can change in the Phone app is how the person's name is displayed when they call. You can choose to have their first names appear first (such as "John Smith") or have their surnames appear first (such as "Smith, John"). To change this, tap the "More" icon in the Phone app and choose "Display Options." In addition to your Android Phone app, Google Play hosts a wide variety of third-party apps that may have the options you're looking for. Caller ID apps can often give you information about who is calling you from a blocked number beyond the "Private Number" your Phone app normally gives. These apps can often give you the country and city of origin of the private number and, in some cases, may tell you the street address. Most of these apps require payment to the developer to unlock this feature. You may or may not have success with these apps, so read the reviews carefully before buying anything. This solution is imperfect, but it may be worth the cost if you want to know who is calling.
