From old school favorites like "Singin' in the Rain" and "West Side Story" to modern classics such as "Chicago" and "High School Musical", there is no shortage of top flakes to enjoy when you are in the mood of some movie and dance songs. It all began with a 1927 film called "The Jazz Singer", which was the first full-length film set in music. When the 1930s turned, the big-screen musicals were a dozen cents. In 1939, a small film called "The Wizard of Oz" was released, catapulting a 16-year-old named Judy Garland in superstardom and cementing his legacy as a musical queen. The genre continued to grow only from that time, laying the classic after the classic and winning an Oscar avalanche along the way. Julie. Andrews ruled the 1960s with hits like "Mary Poppins" and "The Sound of Music", while the end of that decade and the 1970s benefited from Bob Fosse's innovative choreography — "Sweet Charity" and "Cabaret". And while Disney trumped the genre with animated films in the 1990s, the '00s and '10s saw the return of live movie musicals with hits like "My Mom!" and "La Land". In the years following World War II, innovation has brought a new and improved form of white and black television transmission. As a result of this, during these years and the years that followed, televisions began to become a common place not only in institutions, but also in enterprises and homes. The film industry of the 1950s felt directly threatened by this innovation and, consequently, its focus shifted strongly in trying to find ways to bring the audience back to the theatres. This gave rise to several changes to the presentation that eventually debuted as developments such as viewvision, cinemascope, cinerama, and the golden age of film 3d. alfred hitchcock was at the top of his game during this decade; with films such as "backwindow," vertigo, and "strangers on a train." at the same time, on the other side of the world, the Japanese director akira kurosawa directed masterpieces (such as "hidden fortress" and "seven samurai") that would influence future films from around the world. ready to prove you're a movie veteran?
