Browse Premium Templates Spend more time than you originally expected to create a professional CV. Every element of your CV needs to be worked out so that you can be remembered by your employer. As a result, your document can be distinguished from other applications, and this may be an opportunity to pass to the next stage of recruitment. How to start writing a CV (or a Resume)? Read the job offer carefully! In every official recruitment process, or at least the vast majority, the candidate is required to send a CV. Based on the information contained therein, the employer or HR specialist checks whether the candidate meets the specified requirements, and if so, the person is invited to an interview. After this stage of the recruitment process, a decision is taken to recruit the candidate. The sectors and jobs are different and therefore the requirements for candidates vary. Why do I mention this and why is it so important? I wanted to remind you that there is no single template, no single universal document, no CV template designed and adapted for all jobs. The CV is the answer to a specific job offer. Remember to adjust your CV to the chosen job offer. How to do that? Compare the required competences to your skills. If the requirements and your competences coincide, that means only one thing, you are the right person for the job. Use similar vocabulary, phrases from the job offer while writing your CV, it will make you well understood and appreciated as their perfect candidate. Your CV should be consistent. Your experience, skills and interests must be compatible with each other. What else can you do? Even if there is no direct request in the job offer, consider writing a cover letter. Attach a cover letter to your CV template (we have ready-to-use templates, general examples for selected positions. The right CV (or Resume) format, professional CV template - what to choose? Most CV templates can be divided into three main categories. Classic, modern and creative templates. Classic CV / Resume, this form of document will live in almost every industry. Simplicity, minimalism and clarity are the most important advantages of this type of documents. The classic CV will prove itself in technical professions and it is also a good choice for employees from the financial and insurance sector. Modern templates are a good choice for all those who want to show that they are up to date with new trends. A modern CV / Resume is an ideal choice for all IT professions (programmers, network administrators). It is also a good option for managers, traders, analysts. Creative templates will prove effective for creative positions such as computer graphics, advertising and marketing specialist, designer, photographer, copywriter. The most important clues: Download a CV template suitable for your sector (we have prepared classic, modern and creative examples for you to download). You must know that a recruiter spends an average of 7 seconds reviewing a CV, that's not much time, so type the most important information on the first page of the document, because if the employer does not find interesting information on the first page, you can be sure that they will not look at the second page. The candidate's photograph, yes I know in the UK, USA, Canada or Australia we do not add a photo to the Resume, but in other countries the regulations are different. According to the administrators of LinkedIn, a profile with a candidate's photo is more trustworthy and people who have published their photo receive more offers to cooperate. The same dependence applies to application documents. Write only the relevant information in the document, appropriate to the specific job. Add information that adds value to your professional profile or is interesting for your future employer. Develop the Career Summary section - the reader's attention will focus on the content of this section first. Use listed information in your professional skills and experience, this form will make your CV more transparent. Check what skills are required in the job advertisement. If your competences match those of the job advertisement, it is perfect. Remember that those listed in the advertisement are the most important for the employer, pay attention to those that are at the top of the list of requirements (usually those requirements are the most important). Use a list of points to present your skills. Always post information in reverse chronological order, i.e. add the latest experience at the top of the section (as in our sample CV templates, which you can download from the site for free). Write briefly and about yourself (you will tell more about you during the interview), make your CV powerful and short. You have a hobby that interacts with the job, great, write about your interests in your CV. The hobby works well for candidates with little professional experience. Remember, do not add any interests to your CV that may lead to embarrassing questions. Avoid creating large blocks of text, make the space between the sections to make your document more transparent and legible. Before sending your CV to your employer, save your document in PDF format (you have this option in Microsoft Word or use the free online CV wizard). The PDF format ensures that the recipient receives the document exactly as you saved it. Improve your chances of finding a job, prepare a CV that distinguishes itself from other documents. Remember that a good CV format is not everything, the most important thing is the CV content. I will use a metaphor here. The content, not the cover, decides whether a book is good, while a good cover may make you want to pick up such a book in a bookstore. DOCX / WORD format single-column traditional document. A simple and clear one-page combination. Right under the photo and contact details, there is a professional summary section. From this section the employer should start reading the candidate's CV. The next sections are skills, work experience and education. Modern two-column template. Photograph, personal and contact details of the candidate are on the left side of the document. The colours used are grey and white. Fonts used, headlines: Arial Black, other content: Calibri. Elegant, stylish two-column professional résumé template with navy blue and gold accents. You can easily replace the colours used with others. Are you applying for an office job? Are you a salesman, a manager? This is the perfect CV template for you. The versatility of the template allows to use it for many different positions. A creative and elegant 2-column document with graphic elements. Are you applying for a job position where creativity, inventiveness, conceptuality is valued? Are you a graphic designer, designer, marketing specialist? This is a good choice for you. Remember the appropriate name of the file/document, use your first and last name (separated by dashes or underlining sign) e.g. Donald_Smith.pdf Should the graphic form be used in the CV / Resume to present information about the candidate? Did you know that the graphic presentation reaches the reader much faster and more precisely than the text. 1/10 of a second - that's exactly what the reader needs to understand the graphic message (it's much faster if we use the text). The right colours can raise the reader's interest in this part of the application even by 80 percent. The graphic form of presentation of skills will work well for creative positions such as IT graphics, or in the IT sector such as the position of a developer. The content is helpful for aspiring legal secretaries. There are many possible layouts and formats when creating your curriculum vitae. On this page we discuss the format of a CV generally before looking at the CV format that is expected by employers in the UK. Our step-by-step guide walks you through creating each section of your CV. For each part, we explain what information is required to write a great CV and how it should be laid out. The most common format for CV writing used in the UK is reverse chronological. This format of CV places a lot of focus on the skills that are most relevant to the role applied for. The skills section appears after the personal statement rather than towards the end of the CV. It is typically much longer than would be included in a reverse chronological CV.A combination CV is as it sounds: it combines the reverse chronological and functional CV formats, placing equal emphasis on both skills and experience. The layout for this type of CV is more flexible and can be adapted to the job position. So, if you want to put your work experience first, that's fine. If you'd rather put skills first, that's fine too.The difference between this curriculum vitae format and the reverse chronological format is that with this format, the skills and work experience section could be the same size. With the reverse chronological format, the skills section would be much smaller.As the combination format puts emphasis on both work experience and skills, there may be less room for other sections such as interests.Every CV needs to have a few core sections - and there are some optional ones too. Here's what a UK employer will always expect to see on your CV:These sections are always expected on your CV and the above order is typical. However, there are some other sections that we recommend you include to make more of an impact. These are:Finally, there are some sections which you might like to include where they are relevant to you. These are:These sections would typically appear before the hobbies and interests section.You can also find out more about what goes into each of these sections together with the different CV layout and format options in these guides:Each of our featured careers sections includes a library of CV templates with a good CV format and example content for that career, plus a comprehensive industry-specific 'how to write a CV' guide.Did our CV library help you out today? This is a simple effective one-page retail CV that works as either a CV or résumé. It's filled out for a retail sales job but would suit lots of other positions. A fresh bright layout with a professional feel.Each of the core sections mentioned above will be considered in turn.The standard CV format will start with your personal details at the top. Here is what you would usually expect to see in a larger font than the rest of the CV so it stands out. After all, this is your chance to market yourself! If the employer can clearly see who they are reading about, it will help to keep your name fresh in their mind.Middle names are optional, and you obviously need to avoid any nicknames like Mike 'Speedy' Smith. Always keep the format of your CV professional, and remember that you have no clue who will be reading it and how they will perceive any informalities.Title is optional (Mr, Mrs, Miss, Ms) and rarely used.Professional letters (such as those denoting degrees) should be included if relevant to the role.Contact detailsInclude a phone number and email address - however, for obvious reasons don't put down your current work contact details. Also, it is good idea to create a new e-mail address specifically for your CV to ensure it looks professional.For example:'jeniffer.lounds@gmail.com'...looks far more professional than:'loundsjay88@gmail.com'Creating a new e-mail specifically for your CV will also make it easier to spot any messages. Can you imagine if you received an e-mail requesting an interview and it went into your junk folder along with a million others and you missed it? If you're worried about checking too email accounts, set up forwarding from one account to the other. You can then log into your professional email account to reply.It's essential to put a phone number on your CV that you know you will be able to either answer immediately, or at the very least reply to very quickly. Don't forget to also remove any jokes answer machine message. If you are worried about answering the call whilst you are at work, you could state some times on your CV when you are available.Finally, most people include their address. Few UK employers send out interview invites by post these days, but it's good to include an address just in case.Martial status and family (optional - not recommended)Talking about your family on your CV may lead an employer to wonder if you struggle with family commitments - even if there is no actual cause for concern.These details do not need to be included on your CV, but they can help an employer to understand you better and they can help you to stand out from the crowd.If you are married, you should include details of your spouse, and if you have children, you should include details of them. If you are applying for a job that involves a lot of travel, you should include details of your travel arrangements, giving details about marital status and family is completely optional and it's best to leave these out if you have any doubts. Only include them if you're entirely confident that including these details will benefit you.The employer cannot make a decision on whether to hire you or not from this information as per the Equality Act. However, be aware that some UK employers may discriminate behind closed doors and you will have no way of knowing if this is why you didn't get an interview.Date of birth (optional - not recommended)Similar to your marital status and family life, your date of birth is not compulsory for a CV. You cannot be discriminated against based on age when employers are making the decision to hire you or not.Again, deciding whether or not to include your date of birth comes down to personal choice and your potential knowledge of the industry. If you are worried that your age may put off an employer from requesting an interview (too young or too old), then don't put it down.UK employers should not filter candidates for an interview based on age, gender or such other protected characteristics. However, it's impossible to know whether good practice has been adhered to or not. It is therefore better not to take the risk.Nationality (optional - not recommended)Your nationality is of no concern to the employer and doesn't need to be stated unless it is 100% relevant to the role. An example of where nationality could be relevant is for a translator or language teacher role. The same legislation also prohibits discrimination on the grounds of nationality or race.Additional informationYou may need to provide additional information depending on the job you are applying for. It could be a driving job, so stating that you have a full UK driving licence will show you are already ticking that box.Another great example is if you are applying for a computer or website based role. For such roles, you would use this section to showcase your talents with links to website or ventures you've created yourself.PhotoThere are mixed opinions about whether it is a positive or negative to include a photo on your CV. Certainly, if appearance is important to your job, it makes sense to include a professional headshot. For more considerations of the pros and cons, read our article 'Should I include a CV photo?'Sometimes the personal statement is known by other names such as 'objective', 'profile', 'career goal' or 'introduction'. This is one of the most important parts of your CV as it's essentially the crux of your job application. A good statement can increase your chances of the employer noticing your CV. On the flipside, a poorly written statement will lower the chances of them wanting to know more.(b) how you meet the job spec; and(c) what you are looking for.When you're writing your personal statement, focus on the job specification and pick out the most important points the employer is looking for. This section is quite self explanatory, but it's worth noting that you can again consider what's the most important and relevant to the role you are applying for. You may wish to exclude lower level or irrelevant qualifications. Don't forget to also show what grade you achieved if this would enhance the qualification.The typical format for higher level qualifications is to give the qualification and institution where you studied - for example:BSc Computer Science (Upper second class honours) - Jan 2013 - March 2016University of LiverpoolFor lower level qualifications, such as GCSEs and A Levels, it isn't absolutely necessary to name your school or college. You certainly do not need to name earlier schools.Listing sports or fitness activities amongst your interests tells your employer that you take an interest in your health-fewer sick days!Although this section may seem quite insignificant, you'll be surprised at how often a recruiter looks at this section with a keen eye. This is one of the best areas of a CV for an employer to get an idea of your personality.For example, you may enjoy volunteering at the local woodland park at the weekend. This would give employers a sense that you are someone who is helpful and generous. It also suggests you like to work hard without expecting a huge reward other than job satisfaction. You can also use hobbies to demonstrate soft skills such as teamwork and communication.You can see how important this section can be when the employer is trying to build up a picture of what you are like in their mind. Whilst mundane hobbies won't usually harm your chances of an interview, desirable hobbies and interests may help. This basically means you like to get drunk on Saturday night!It might be true, but it doesn't sound very interesting!Include achievements either within your work history, in a separate section or a combination of both. They can also be dotted around your CV where there is space (although take care not to clutter the layout). In this section, two-page template, you can see how achievements work well in their own section:If you've received an award that's relevant to your role, go right ahead and boast about it! Awards help build your credibility and demonstrate your achievements.They are a third-party endorsement and they can therefore give your CV a valuable boost.Being a member of a professional body shows that you're interested in the industry and involved with its development. It can also help to demonstrate that you're staying up-to-date with industry developments. You'll see that we recommend various professional bodies in our featured careers sections (links above).Whether you're a regular contributor to your company blog or you've penned something for an industry mag, now's the time to brag about it. A publications section can demonstrate you're interested and actively involved in your target industry. It demonstrates to the employer that you have knowledge, passion and great written communication skills.Endorsements don't need their own heading - they can go wherever there is space. Alternatively you can add them underneath your references. They are a brief testimonial which may come from your references or from some other credible person. Like awards, they are third-party proof that you're a worthy candidate. A strong endorsement can give your CV a valuable boost.Did our CV library help you out today?
