While they normally send out their flyer in the local free newspaper, it seems when they are having their special sales (Red Thursday, Black Friday etc) they use Canada Post so that you actually get their flyer. A few others do that too because the local newspaper is so unreliable. It either doesn't come or comes late after the sale has begun. I wish more retailers would smarten up and ditch the local paper and start using Canada Post. I fully support local news but after years of dealing with them trying to address delivery issues, I just realize it's a lost cause. I had a carrier who only delivered every other week, then stopped delivering all together and was still being paid. He even moved away and they still considered him the carrier. Got switched to delivery direct from their office and still the paper didn't come or would arrive days late. All you need to know is if an item you want is on sale or not, why do you need a printed out flyer.He doesn't, he can just look at them online since he's already online anyway. It's just a big waste to print them. We still like flipping through it just for information's sake. A lot of companies used the "opportunity" presented by COVID to switch to a digital-only format for their weekly circulars, RCSS and No Frills among them. This was probably something they were planning to do for years, COVID just gave them the push. We also saw this with airlines, as many carriers stopped printing their in-flight magazines (which I always rather liked) and went to online-only. Again, this was likely a contemplated move for a long time. None of us mind the flyers we get in the mail. The furry members of our household always seem to make use of them for cozy bed liners. The way I'm reading it, if you spend $125+ on this purchase, you get a promo for a future purchase ($25 for MC, $30 for the now expired weekend offer). My question is, do those future purchases need to be above a certain threshold to be used? Wondering if anyone has some past experience with these. I'm having a bit of trouble right now, so please help me out. I'm interested in applying to uoft life science (I applied to the scarbrough campus and the st geroge one). I have 90's in all my other courses, however i was at risk of possibly ending up with a final mark of 60 in chem (my teacher made the course SO difficult), and I withdrew after the midterms had been handed out, so technically, according to my guidance counsellor, my chem mark will count as a repeat, when I take it next sem. If it counts for anything, my midterm mark (the mark that will show up on m transcript) was an 80.how screwed am I? do I still have a chance of getting into uoft, assuming all my other courses are high 80's, low 90's on the first attempt? Dec 24th, 2016 11:28 am woof122Newbie Oct 21, 2014 71 posts 28 upvotes Toronto, ON Dec 24th, 2016 11:28 amI'm not sure about the admission requirements for uoft life science, but 60 for chem sounds a bit low. Be certain that you are dead set on medical school or other professional programs before going in life science. It can be a very costly gamble. I think I'm capable of doing alot better in chem, if my teacher wasn't so difficult. A life science degree from UofT, even if you just squeak through it, is pretty valuable on its own. You're going to come out with a working understanding of all branches of biology, chemistry and basic physics, stats and will know how to approach problems in a logical and scientific way. Oh I'm not questioning the academia aspect. You will definitely learn the science, just like any other life sci programs out there. It's a gamble in the sense that the program rarely translates into relevant employment as a standalone degree. And the UTSC FAQ saysRepeated Courses While we recognize there may be valid reasons why you repeated a course, in general we urge you to do as well as possible on your first attempt. But I would think they accept such huge numbers that ONE repeated course would not be the end of your hopes of attending U of T. Why don't you contact the admissions office yourself and talk to them? They can probably reassure you better/give you more information than we can. Dec 26th, 2016 10:09 am Don't do life sciences.....unless you know for sure that you will go into med school with it.
